VIII. Certain observations on the international application

The following observations on the clarity of the claims, description, and drawings or on the question whether the claims are fully supported by the description, are made:

see separate sheet

SECTION V

1. The priority documents of the application are presently not available at the examining office. It is therefore provisionally assumed that the claimed priority be valid. Otherwise document D2 (EP-A-0 862 304) would have to be considered relevant with respect to novelty for claims 1 and 37 and with respect to inventive step for claims 10, 17, 28, 45, 51 and 61.
2. With respect to the subject-matter of claim 1, document D1 (WO-A-96 42145) discloses a method of asynchronously transferring data objects by:
 - transmitting to a client an identifier for a data objects (D1, claim 18);
 - transferring between host and client a data frame including an identifier and at least a portion of the corresponding data object (D1, claim 19); and
 - repeating the data frame transfers until the data object has been transferred (D1, abstract).

Contrary to the applicant's arguments, no feature in present claim 1 relates to the interleaving of uploads and downloads for one client device, claim 1 rather refers to downloads between host devices and client devices in general. Furthermore the interleaving defined in dependent claim 6 is not restricted to a single client and could therefore be interpreted as interleaving at host devices (for example servers), which are generally able to communicate with a plurality of clients at the same time.

Secondly, claim 1 does also not explicitly define a full-duplex data communication system. The use of the known method in a full-duplex communication system could, however, also not be considered inventive.

The present application does therefore not satisfy the criterion set forth in Article 33(3) PCT because the subject-matter of Claim 1 does not involve an inventive step (Rule 65(1)(2) PCT).

The same applies to independent claim 37, containing the same features in terms of program instructions contained in a computer readable medium, as well as to independent claims 10 and 45, where the additional feature of the delivery of a routing path to a client is standard practice.

The remaining independent claims 17, 27, 51 and 61 basically recite commonly used protocol features, rendered obvious for example from the FTP standard (FTP: File Transfer Protocol)) such as data frame requests issued by a client (claims 17, 51) or the process handling (claims 28, 61). These features are also common Internet practice.

The present application does therefore not satisfy the criterion set forth in Article 33(3) PCT because the subject-matter of the above claims does also not involve an inventive step (Rule 65(1)(2) PCT).

3. The subject-matter of the dependent claims only covers implementation details which are either rendered obvious by documents and existing protocol standards or lie fully within the normal capabilities of a person skilled in the art.

Therefore the dependent claims do not add anything of inventive significance to the respective main claims.

SECTION VII

The independent claims are not in the two-part form in accordance with Rule 6.3(b) PCT, which in the present case would be appropriate, with those features known in combination from the prior art being placed in a preamble (Rule 6.3(b)(i) PCT) and with the remaining features being included in a characterising part (Rule 6.3(b)(ii) PCT).

The features of the claims are not provided with reference signs placed in parentheses (Rule 6.2(b) PCT).

Contrary to the requirements of Rule 5.1(a)(ii) PCT, the relevant background art

INTERNATIONAL PRELIMINARY
EXAMINATION REPORT - SEPARATE SHEET

International application No. PCT/US98/27268

disclosed in the documents D1 and D2 are not mentioned in the description, nor are these documents identified therein.

SECTION VIII

The various definitions of the subject-matter given in the independent Claims are such that the claims as a whole are not clear and concise, contrary to Article 6 PCT. The claims should include only the minimum necessary number of independent claims in any one category, with dependent claims as appropriate (Rule 6.4(a)-(c) PCT).

In the present case it is considered appropriate to use only one independent claim in any category.

This applies also with respect to unity, as it is not clear at present if all independent claims relate to the same subject-matter, in particular as claims 28 and 61 deal mainly with the establishment of a session protocol defining an upload or a download.

VIII. Certain observations on the international application

The following observations on the clarity of the claims, description, and drawings or on the question whether the claims are fully supported by the description, are made:

see separate sheet

SECTION V

1. The priority documents of the application are presently not available at the examining office. It is therefore provisionally assumed that the claimed priority be valid. Otherwise document D2 (EP-A-0 862 304) would have to be considered relevant with respect to novelty for claims 1 and 37 and with respect to inventive step for claims 10, 17, 28, 45, 51 and 61.
2. With respect to the subject-matter of claim 1, document D1 (WO-A-96 42145) discloses a method of asynchronously transferring data objects by:
 - transmitting to a client an identifier for a data objects (D1, claim 18);
 - transferring between host and client a data frame including an identifier and at least a portion of the corresponding data object (D1, claim 19); and
 - repeating the data frame transfers until the data object has been transferred (D1, abstract).

There remains only the difference that according to claim 1 a plurality of identifiers are used, whereas D1 only shows a single file descriptor for a data group. This simple modification lies, however, fully within the normal capabilities of a person, skilled in the art.

The present application does thus not satisfy the criterion set forth in Article 33(3) PCT because the subject-matter of Claim 1 does not involve an inventive step (Rule 65(1)(2) PCT).

The same applies to independent claim 37, containing the same features in terms of program instructions contained in a computer readable medium.

The remaining independent claims 10, 17, 27, 45, 51 and 61 basically recite commonly used protocol features, rendered obvious for example from the FTP standard (FTP: File Transfer Protocol)) such as data frame requests issued by a client (claims 17, 51) or the transfer of routing information and process handling (claims 10, 28, 45, 61).

The present application does therefore not satisfy the criterion set forth in Article 33(3) PCT because the subject-matter of the above claims does also not involve an inventive step (Rule 65(1)(2) PCT).

3. The subject-matter of the dependent claims only covers implementation details which are either rendered obvious by documents and existing international protocol standards or lie fully within the normal capabilities of a person skilled in the art.

Therefore the dependent claims do not add anything of inventive significance to the respective main claims.

SECTION VII

If a new set of claims should be filed, it is considered appropriate to draft the independent claims in the two-part form as required by Rule 6.3(b) PCT, whereby the features known from document D1 should be placed in the preamble.

To meet the requirements of Rule 5.1(a)(ii) PCT, documents D1 and D2 should be identified in the description and the relevant background art disclosed therein should be briefly discussed.

The applicant should bring the description into conformity with the new claims; care should be taken during revision, especially of the introductory portion including any statement of problem or advantage, not to add subject-matter which extends beyond the content of the application as originally filed, (Article 34(2)(b) PCT).

Reference signs in parentheses should be inserted in the claims to increase their intelligibility, Rule 6.2(b) PCT. This applies to both the preamble and characterising portion.

SECTION VIII

The various definitions of the subject-matter given in the independent Claims are such that the claims as a whole are not clear and concise, contrary to Article 6 PCT. The claims should include only the minimum necessary number of independent claims in any one category, with dependent claims as appropriate (Rule 6.4(a)-(c) PCT).

In the present case it is considered appropriate to use only one independent claim in any category.

SECTION V

1. The priority documents of the application are presently not available at the examining office. It is therefore provisionally assumed that the claimed priority be valid. Otherwise document D2 (EP-A-0 862 304) would have to be considered relevant with respect to novelty for claims 1 and 37 and with respect to inventive step for claims 10, 17, 28, 45, 51 and 61.
2. With respect to the subject-matter of claim 1, document D1 (WO-A-96 42145) discloses a method of asynchronously transferring data objects by:
 - transmitting to a client an identifier for a data objects (D1, claim 18);
 - transferring between host and client a data frame including an identifier and at least a portion of the corresponding data object (D1, claim 19); and
 - repeating the data frame transfers until the data object has been transferred (D1, abstract).

Contrary to the applicant's arguments, no feature in present claim 1 relates to the interleaving of uploads and downloads for one client device, claim 1 rather refers to downloads between host devices and client devices in general. Furthermore the interleaving defined in dependent claim 6 is not restricted to a single client and could therefore be interpreted as interleaving at host devices (for example servers), which are generally able to communicate with a plurality of clients at the same time.

Secondly, claim 1 does also not explicitly define a full-duplex data communication system. The use of the known method in a full-duplex communication system could, however, also not be considered inventive.

The present application does therefore not satisfy the criterion set forth in Article 33(3) PCT because the subject-matter of Claim 1 does not involve an inventive step (Rule 65(1)(2) PCT).

The same applies to independent claim 37, containing the same features in terms of program instructions contained in a computer readable medium, as well as to independent claims 10 and 45, where the additional feature of the delivery of a routing path to a client is standard practice.

The remaining independent claims 17, 27, 51 and 61 basically recite commonly used protocol features, rendered obvious for example from the FTP standard (FTP: File Transfer Protocol)) such as data frame requests issued by a client (claims 17, 51) or the process handling (claims 28, 61). These features are also common Internet practice.

The present application does therefore not satisfy the criterion set forth in Article 33(3) PCT because the subject-matter of the above claims does also not involve an inventive step (Rule 65(1)(2) PCT).

3. The subject-matter of the dependent claims only covers implementation details which are either rendered obvious by documents and existing protocol standards or lie fully within the normal capabilities of a person skilled in the art.

Therefore the dependent claims do not add anything of inventive significance to the respective main claims.

SECTION VII

The independent claims are not in the two-part form in accordance with Rule 6.3(b) PCT, which in the present case would be appropriate, with those features known in combination from the prior art being placed in a preamble (Rule 6.3(b)(i) PCT) and with the remaining features being included in a characterising part (Rule 6.3(b)(ii) PCT).

The features of the claims are not provided with reference signs placed in parentheses (Rule 6.2(b) PCT).

Contrary to the requirements of Rule 5.1(a)(ii) PCT, the relevant background art

EXAMINATION REPORT - SEPARATE SHEET

disclosed in the documents D1 and D2 are not mentioned in the description, nor are these documents identified therein.

SECTION VIII

The various definitions of the subject-matter given in the independent Claims are such that the claims as a whole are not clear and concise, contrary to Article 6 PCT. The claims should include only the minimum necessary number of independent claims in any one category, with dependent claims as appropriate (Rule 6.4(a)-(c) PCT).

In the present case it is considered appropriate to use only one independent claim in any category.

This applies also with respect to unity, as it is not clear at present if all independent claims relate to the same subject-matter, in particular as claims 28 and 61 deal mainly with the establishment of a session protocol defining an upload or a download.
